For those who love her work, Andy Buckram's Tin Men is another favorite. Andy loves tin cans and finds endless uses for them, but when he reads in the newspaper and learns a California boy built an 11 foot robot, he can't wait to try too!

Andy Buckram's Tin Men by Carol Ryrie Brink (1966) | Kids

Mostly though, I loved the tin men, with their very different personalities, Andy's relationship with them, and their relationships with each other as they become more aware of themselves. The end left me hoping for more adventures, but if there were more, I had to make them up in my head.

Old Favorites: Andy Buckram's Tin Men | BellaOnBooks's Blog

'Andy Buckram's Tin Men', written by Carol Ryrie Brink, writer of the Caddie Woodlawn series, is essentially about a young boy named Andy who invents and builds things. One day while babysitting his baby niece and amusing her with two soup cans, he hits upon the idea of building a robot, or, 'Tin Man' from the shells of old cans. Working quickly and inventively at home, in quick succession he ...
