and practice: learning as a process of active engagement; ... and that the mind changes through use; that is, learning changes the structure of the brain (Bransford, Brown, and Cocking 2000). However, it is still too early to claim that neuroscience can definitely explain how people learn. The work of other cognitive theorists helps here. For example, research suggests that learners—from a ...

Learning and Assessing Through Reflection

Learning through reflection is far more effective if you have an understanding of frameworks that encourage a structural process to guide the act of reflection. Various models have been developed which may suit individuals or particular situations. It is a good idea to research these models. It is however, important that you choose the framework that you feel most comfortable with and which ...
