Mark Manson on Self-Knowledge

The pursuit of self-knowledge is at the heart of most religions and philosophical pursuits across the world. It seems that an unfortunate side effect of the brain's marvelous ability to question everything is the brain's ability to question itself. "Who am I? Why do I do the things I do? Can I change?" These are questions that inevitably plague us all in one form or another. And while ...

self-knowledge as "the most interesting of all human studies." It is the tersest, wisest of instructions, yet little heeded nowadays, and it is incapable of fulfillment unless undertaken in accordance with the ancient science and with a concentration of one's whole energies upon the task . It involves the deepest introspection into oneself and perfect discrimination between what is real and ...
