The Legacy, by Kirsten Tranter, was longlisted for the 2011 Miles Franklin. It's an accomplished debut novel in many ways, but it failed to engage me in a sustained way. I read about 50 pages of it, put it aside, and forgot about it until I realised it would soon be due back at the library. And then I had to start again because I couldn't remember what it was about. Like Henry James' A Portrait of a Lady, the novel from which the plot is derived, it's more of a meditation than a page ...
