7. Documenting Python¶ The Python language has a substantial body of documentation, much of it contributed by various authors. The markup used for the Python documentation is reStructuredText, developed by the docutils project, amended by custom directives and using a toolset named Sphinx to post-process the HTML output.

7. Documenting Python Python Developer's Guide

The futurize and python-modernize tools do not currently offer an option to do this automatically. If you are writing code for a new project or new codebase, you can use this idiom to make all string literals in a module unicode strings:
